StatsCan's proposal

RECORDS SEARCH

Agency wants more power to collect citizen,
business info

Statistics Canada is privately floating the idea of new powers that would make all of its surveys mandatory by default and force certain companies to hand over requested data, such as credit card transactions and Internet search records.

Currently, the agency can ask for any information held by governments and businesses, but officials have long found it hard to get information like point-of-sale transactions that could give a more detailed and accurate picture of household spending.

The agency's proposal would compel governments and companies to hand over information, and levy fines to discourage "unreasonable impositions" that "restrict or prevent the flow of information for statistical purposes."

Corporate fines would depend on a company's size and the length of any delays.

The changes would also do away with the threat of jail time for anyone who refuses to fill out a mandatory survey, such as the long-form census.

The recommendations, contained in a discussion paper Statistics Canada provided to The Canadian Press, would enshrine in law the agency's independence in deciding what data it needs and how to collect it.

New legislation to update the Statistics Act is expected to be tabled this fall, and the Liberals have promised to give Statistics Canada more freedom from government influence.

Abdi was a 'peaceful person'

COMMUNITY REACTION

Neighbours share thoughts following man's death in custody

Joe Lofaro
Metro | Ottawa

For the past six years, the owners of the Aljazeera Food and Meat Market in Hintonburg would often see Abdirahman Abdi stroll into their shop on Wellington Street West to buy phone cards to call his relatives in Somalia or to pick up some food for his family.

"He was a very, very quiet person. A very peaceful person. It was a big shock to me," said Hani — who declined to give his last name — from behind the counter Tuesday morning, still reeling from Abdi's death.

The 37-year-old Somali-Canadian's death on Sunday while in Ottawa police custody following an altercation outside 55 Hilda St. is sending shock waves across the immigrant community and is now the subject of an investigation by the Special Investigations Unit, a civilian police oversight agency. Several witnesses and family members say he suffered from an unspecified mental illness.

The SIU is currently interviewing two subject officers involved in the incident and

Bosco Kiabu says Abdi's death outside his building on Hilda Street has made him fearful of the police. JOE LOFARO/METRO five witness officers.

"Sometimes I pushed him to talk because he's not that kind of person who likes to talk a lot. I chitchat with him, joke with him," recalled Hani. "He never hurt anyone with any word he mentioned."

Abdi's brother, Abdul Razaq, dropped by the store around 3 p.m. Monday afternoon in tears and bought four phone cards, said Hani.

"He was sad, very quiet. I saw a tear. I never saw a tear on his cheek. I said, 'What's wrong?' and he said, 'The police killed him yesterday.' This is what he said, word for word," said Hani.

Graphic video footage emerged Tuesday morning on YouTube appearing to show Abdi lying motionless in front of the apartment building's entrance in handcuffs with his T-shirt and face covered in blood. At least one woman can be heard in the video wailing from inside the lobby, while a man tells four Ottawa police officers off-camera, "This is the family. I am the superintendent."

Another YouTube video — which, according to the person who posted it, was shot from the same building's ninth floor — appears to show Abdi moving his legs while he is pinned underneath an officer. In the distance, a man can be heard yelling, "What's wrong with you guys? What the heck?"

Questions continue to swirl around the nature of Abdi's death, which is making national headlines as the Ottawa Police Service faces backlash for how the event unfolded. Neighbours and fellow Hintonburg residents all say Abdi was a peaceful and quiet man.

Bosco Kiabu, originally from the Democratic Republic of the Congo, lives in the same building as Abdi's family. He said Abdi would often offer to help him bring bags into the building when he bumped into him. He was quiet and was not aggressive, he said.

According to Kiabu, things changed after Abdi returned to Canada from Somalia in early 2016. He was a different person, Kiabu said.

"Before he was good. He was talking," he recalled, before the trip to Somalia. But Kiabu says he noticed a change when Abdi returned from the Somalia trip. "He was sick in the head. Like mental or something."

The incident has shaken Kiabu.

"I'm very scared. I'm scared when police come very close to me," he said.

"That imagination come to me, like, I don't know, if I say any word it can happen like (Abdi)."

Past arrest mirrors Abdi case

STEPHANE MICHAUD

2005 fatality shares alleged cause with recent tragedy

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

You have to go back 11 years to find another case in which someone died, as Abdirahman Abdi did, after being restrained by Ottawa police.

That's what happened to Stephane Michaud in 2005. And while the circumstances of Abdi and Michaud's deaths are not the same, they are similar in that both died after being restrained by police.

Michaud, a 43-year-old Mont-realer, arrived at the Ottawa airport on a one-way ticket from Halifax on the morning of June 5, 2005.

What happened next was the subject of a public inquest by Ontario's Ministry of Health and an SIU investigation.

About an hour after he arrived at the airport, Michaud — who held two university degrees, and who had been diagnosed with schizophrenia five years earlier — began acting strangely, banging his head on the floor and yelling that he wanted to die.

An off-duty RCMP officer and airport staff tried to calm down Michaud, and three men eventually restrained him until Ottawa police arrived.

But they struggled to restrain Michaud. Eventually, he was handcuffed and placed on a stretcher in "prone" position — face down, which his chest to the ground.

He was injected with a sedative and became calm — until a bystander realized his face was turning blue. Paramedics and officers tried to resuscitate Michaud, but he was pronounced dead in the emergency room after arriving at the Ottawa Hospital.

The investigation into Michaud's death started in June 2005 and ended two years later when the results of a 12-day government inquest were made public. Investigators talked to family and eyewitnesses and reviewed surveillance tape to piece together what happened.

Both paramedics and police officers on scene were cleared of criminal wrongdoing.

Michaud's autopsy characterized his death as an accident, but blamed the "prone position" he was placed in for cutting off his air supply.

The inquest made 11 recommendations and criticized first responder training and response time. During the inquest, Alain Michaud, a medical doctor, linked his brother's death to similar incidents across the country where a patient being arrested has gone into "excited delirium" and eventually died after being forced into the prone position.

"I realized there were a lot of people who died in the same way as my brother," he told the

Ottawa Citizen in 2006.

In the end, the inquest's recommendations resulted in 38 more paramedics being hired to improve response times, extra training to deal with psychiatric patients and a ban on using the prone position in Ottawa Paramedic Service policies.

The family didn't sue after his death, but Michaud's brother Gilles Michaud told the newspaper that he hoped the results of the inquest would prevent future deaths.

There were a lot of people who died the same way as my brother.

Questions and calls for caution: politicians, community respond

Emma Jackson
Metro | Ottawa

Politicians, community groups and advocates have been weighing in on the death of Abdirahman Abdi, who was arrested by Ottawa Police on July 24.

While the SIU continues its investigation, here's what some members of the community — ranging from politicians to members of community organizations — had to say.

Coun. Jeff Leiper:

"People can't believe that this has happened in Ottawa," said Leiper, who represents the Hintonburg neighbourhood where the arrest took place, on Tuesday.

"Like every Hintonburger, I'm feeling this loss. People are personally grieving this, they feel as though a valuable community member has been lost," he said.

While he said he has questions like everyone else, he cautioned residents not to jump to conclusions before the SIU fully investigates the incident.

MPP Yasir Naqvi:

"This is a sorrow that no family should ever have to experience," Naqvi said in a statement, in which he expressed condolences for Abdi's family, his neighbours and the Ottawa-Somali community.

"I know from my experience working with community groups and local law enforcement that we all want our community to be safe and welcoming for everyone. This is what unites us and we are stronger when we continue to support one another."

Leslie Emory, OCISO:

Leslie Emory, director of immigrant support agency OCISO, which served Abdi as a client, called for unity while the community waits for answers.

"What I really would like to see happening moving forward is that we all kind of come together, try to understand what happened, get transparency, get complete answers and then move forward together," Emory said. "And if things need to change, we work together to change those."

Amira Elghawaby, National Council of Canadian Muslims:

Council spokesperson Amira Elghawaby said "trust has been shaken" among Ottawa's Muslim community.

"There is an immediate fear of the police in such a situation where a man has now passed away," Elghawaby said.

But the council is also heartened by Ottawa Police's "robust community engagement" strategy.

"We've heard the right messaging, at least, from the police service," she said.

Fake 'free toys' ad rips off daycare

Owner away while strangers unwittingly looted her yard

Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

As a home daycare provider, Heaven Stewart is used to having a yard full of colourful toys.

But she found her children's playthings missing on Sunday after someone posted a Kijiji ad for "free toys" with her Bells Corners address.

Toy structures, water and sand tables, a picnic table, and a teeter-totter are among the items missing from her property. She also had to throw out a large trampoline after someone sliced through the jumping mat. She estimates about $4,000 in lost or vandalized stuff.

"I'm not sure how somebody can have that much hate for children playing and children's toys," she said. "I don't know what would possess somebody to think that that's OK to do that to somebody's property."

While she wouldn't name names, Stewart suspects a neighbour is behind the ad.

"They had told us that it was an eyesore, that our toys are an eyesore and that the kids are loud out there playing sometimes," she said.

As her yard was being looted on Sunday, Stewart was returning home from a weekend at the lake with her husband. Her teen daughter noticed the Kijiji posting while at work, and sent the ad to her mother.

It read: "FREE TOYS closing home daycare ... we got them for free so we are passing them on to someone who can use them. First come first served NO EMAILS must be gone by 4 PM then we are donating them. Please leave trampoline. Help yourself ... thanks."

$4,000

The estimated value of the articles lost or vandalized.

The ad listed the family's Bells Corners address and went on, "take little cars underneath trampoline too..."

Stewart doesn't blame those who took the toys, but whoever posted the ad. She said she has notified the police and Kijiji.

Ottawa police spokesman Cst. Chuck Benoit confirmed that police are investigating.

In the meantime, Stewart has posted a new ad asking that the toys be returned.

So far, a couple of toy cars have come back.

She's currently sharing guardianship of two children, aged three and five, who also played with the toys.

"The daycare kids were sad, but the little kids that live here were saddest. It's their things too," she said.

LCBO launches online sales with home and in-store delivery

The Liquor Control Board of Ontario launched online sales Tuesday with a website that lets people buy from nearly 5,000 products and have them delivered to their home or a local liquor store.

Finance Minister Charles Sousa said the creation of LCBO.com shows the government-owned liquor agency's commitment to evolve and modernize, and will provide greater convenience for consumers.

"The virtual shelf space now available to small wineries and breweries is fantastic," said Sousa.

"Consumers who may not have their favourite product at their local store will now have 5,000 products available right at their fingertips, and they'll be able to find what they need with the click of a mouse."

There is a $50 minimum for any purchases through LCBO.com and purchases could be delivered to a neighbourhood LCBO store for free, or to a customer's home through Canada Post for a $12 fee plus tax. Postal workers will have to ask for identification or return the liquor to the postal depot for customer pickup.

The online sales site will be a huge boost to Ontario wineries, breweries and cider producers, predicted LCBO president and CEO George Soleas.

"If I was a small brewery or small winery and was only able to deliver to five or 10 LCBO stores, now we've opened the entire province to that small brewery or winery," he said. "So if you're participating with e-commerce, you can have your products delivered now to anywhere in the province of Ontario."

Wines from British Columbia and Quebec will also be available at LCBO.com thanks to an agreement reached last Friday by the premiers of the three provinces, added Sousa, who made some online purchases himself Tuesday morning.

"You can also identify product by region, so I actually used Niagara as one region and the Okanagan from B.C. as another region," he said. "And of course it's not just wines; it's beer, it's spirits and a host of other products that are available."

The LCBO.com site will also be good for suppliers of alcoholic beverages from around the world who are not well represented in LCBO stores because they don't meet the production quotas needed to be listed by the liquor agency.

"There are no more quotas for these products as long as they're willing to participate in e-commerce," said Soleas.

The LCBO said 800 of the products available online will be exclusive to LCBO.com and will not be available in any of its 655 retail outlets.

The online portal already lists more products than are carried in any LCBO store, added Soleas, who said the agency's flagship retail outlet in Toronto carries about 3,400 products while the large Summerhill store in Toronto carries about 4,000.

The agency said LCBO.com could eventually list up to 16,000 products for sale.

The LCBO reported record sales of $5.6 billion in 2015-16, up 6.8 per cent over the previous year, and paid a dividend of $1.9 billion to the government, an increase of $130 million.

Police save two from watery peril

Police in West Quebec rescued two people in two separate water-related incidents on Monday.

At around 10:30 a.m., MRC des Collines police pulled an 84-year-old woman from the Gatineau River. She was "almost completely submerged," according to a police news release, but had been holding on to a rock for about two hours. The woman, who has Alzheimer's, had been reported missing by her spouse.

Those same officers then responded to a call at around 1:30 p.m. from a 45-year-old man "suffering from psychological distress" who said he wanted to commit suicide. Police found him unconscious in the middle of Meech Lake, with his head in the water. Police pulled him out with a canoe and transported him to shore, where RCMP officers and paramedics were also on site.

Both rescues are expected to live. LUCY SCHOLEY/METRO

Moose Consortium, a group of 12 mostly locally owned businesses, is pushing to build a train route extending as far as Arnprior, Smiths Falls and Alexandria on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River, stretching to Bristol, Wakefield and Montebello in Quebec. ISTOCK

Full steam ahead for Ottawa's privately owned commuter rail

TRANSPORTATION

Line to link six towns via 400 kilometres of extant track

David Sali
Ottawa Business Journal

He might be riding his proposal for a privately backed commuter train into uncharted territory, but that hasn't dampened Joseph Potvin's sense of optimism.

Potvin is director general of Moose Consortium, a group of 12 mostly locally owned businesses pushing to build a train that would link six rural Ontario and Quebec communities to downtown Ottawa using 400 kilometres of existing track.

No one in this country has launched a railway using nothing but private money in more than a century, a fact the Chelsea-based economist is well aware of. But he believes there's no time like the present to revive such a concept, and he thinks his group has just the plan to do it.

"Every study that has been done in North America and the world on metropolitan-scale passenger rail shows that there are significant property value impacts," Potvin says, explaining that his consortium won't actually build the stations — which would number as many as 50 in the group's long-term plan — itself.

Instead, Moose will turn the task of developing stations and their surrounding lands over to other private entities.

Potvin is banking that commercial enterprises will want to set up shop near the stations and believes homebuilders will target nearby lands for future development.

Moose would then split profits from any long-term property value gains with its station partners and collect a fee for providing the tracks and trains.

"If there's not enough (development) potential in a location, then there won't be train service there," he says. "It's really quite simple."

Under Moose Consortium's plan, the railway would stretch its tentacles in all directions, extending as far as Arnprior, Smiths Falls and Alexandria on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River while stretching to Bristol, Wakefield and Montebello in Quebec.

Moose would lease the tracks from a host of partners, including the cities of Ottawa and Gatineau, VIA, Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railway.

Stations would be built an average of eight kilometres apart, and passengers would travel on double-decker diesel-electric trains that would eventually hook up with Ottawa's light-rail service to deliver commuters downtown.

The group has applied to the Canadian Transportation Agency for a certificate of fitness to allow it to move forward with its plan and hopes to gain the necessary approvals by this fall.

Transport Canada would also have to sign off on the plan, and there are 15 municipal governments who all want a say in a proposal involving trains passing through their boundaries.

Recently, the group presented a plan to spend $50 million to overhaul the Prince of Wales rail bridge connecting Ottawa to Gatineau. The 135-year-old structure is owned by the City of Ottawa, which would need to approve the retrofit, and technically falls under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transportation

+ A MAYOR'S PERSPECTIVE

Commuters in Smith Falls will benefit, says Pankow

Smiths Falls Mayor Shawn Pankow supports the project, claiming a commuter train could help attract new residents and commercial development to the town of 9,000.

"We have a large number of people who commute to (Ottawa) for work, and enabling people to get there quicker, more efficiently, more cost-effectively creates more demand for people to move to our community," he says.

"I think, when we first heard about this a few years ago, it seemed a little bit pie-in-the-sky at the time. They've come a long way to get to where they are today."

Agency because it crosses an interprovincial border.

Potvin concedes that not all municipal politicians the group has spoken with are fully on board with the plan. Some residents who live near the proposed lines have expressed concerns about noise and safety among other issues, he explains.

Ian Lee, a professor at Carleton University's Sprott School of Business, cautions the group still must navigate through more red tape before it reaches its goal.

He also notes it faces another major hurdle — convincing automobile-loving commuters to ditch their vehicles and hop on the train.

"They're not competing with buses, they're not competing with other trains — this consortium is essentially competing with the automobile," he says.

"The fact remains, the car is overwhelmingly the No. 1 choice of transportation in Canada."

“Every study that has been done on metropolitan-scale passenger rail shows that there are significant property value impacts.” Joseph Potvin

Banks to hand over offshore files

REVENUE AGENCY

Feds win orders in fight against tax cheats

The Trudeau government has won a round in its battle against offshore tax cheats.

Two banks have agreed to give the federal revenue minister information from the accounts of a Caribbean financial institution to help the government crack down on Canadian tax evaders.

The Federal Court of Canada has approved federal requests for seven years' worth of transaction information from the Royal Bank of Canada and Citibank, N.A., related to accounts in the name of Cayman National Bank Ltd.

The Royal Bank and Citibank — neither of which opposed the federal demands — have 120 days to hand over records from Jan. 1, 2009, through Dec. 31, 2015, including account statements, deposit slips, cheques, bank drafts and wire transfer orders.

The Canada Revenue Agency

plans to comb through the data to see if Canadian residents are using the Canadian dollar accounts, opened by Cayman National Bank, to transfer funds to Canada and avoid reporting taxable income from their foreign holdings.

The Federal Court of Canada has approved federal requests for seven years' worth of transaction information from the Royal Bank of Canada and Citibank, N.A.

The move is part of the government's ongoing efforts to fight offshore tax evasion, said revenue agency spokesman David Walters. "The CRA is committed to combating the abusive use of offshore jurisdictions and protecting the integrity of the Canadian tax system."

In an affidavit filed with the Federal Court, David Letkeman, an auditor with the agency's offshore compliance section, says past investigations have confirmed that Canadian residents use accounts with foreign financial institutions to hide taxable income.

"In my experience, the expectation of such persons is that the CRA would not discover the entities, accounts and omitted income."

In this case, the revenue agency has not yet identified Canadians suspected of an offshore tax dodge. However, Letkeman says the agency was alerted to the possible Cayman ruse by a Canadian woman who voluntarily disclosed her dealings through a special program that allows those who come forward to avoid prosecution.

Documents showed the woman's funds flowed from the Cayman Islands — through Cayman National Bank's correspondent account with the Canadian branch of Citibank, N.A. — to a Canadian bank account in her name. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Racers converge on Canada's first drone championships

Alex Boyd
Metro | Edmonton

Racing is the next big thing to hit the drone world, and it's coming to Edmonton.

This weekend sees the first Canadian Drone Racing Championship Cup, held in Edmonton, and it's all going down in a custom-built indoor course on the K-Days grounds.

It's one of the first major drone races to happen in Canada.

The course features obstacles like bends, curtains and nets that drones must navigate, even as they reach speeds up to 160 km/h. The people flying them are seated, and wear goggles that allow them to see the feed from a drone-mounted camera, as if they were actually flying.

"I've always been into speed and sports, like go-karting and racing dirt bikes," said Travis Ames, one of the almost 30 racers competing for the $1,000 prize this weekend.

"But you'll get injured riding dirt bikes, but when you're piloting a drone you can push yourself," he said, "and when you hit the tree and destroy the drone you're like, 'I'm still alive!'"

Ames started racing about eight months ago, and now flies about "10 batteries a day"

(because racing drones are so lightweight a battery only lasts three to four minutes, so pilots tend to measure time in battery packs rather than minutes).

Ames said he's looking forward to the weekend to meet new people and learn from other pilots. In such a new field, everyone still has a pretty unique flying style and drone build.

Adam O'Brien, owner of local online shop Drone Zone, the event's title sponsor, said he hopes the event raises awareness for an up-and-coming sport.

"Who doesn't like something that's small, that goes fast and has crazy control? It's pretty obvious that these things are not easy to fly, so the difficulty part is cool, too."

O'Brien added that given Edmonton's rapidly growing tech sector, the city is a natural fit for drone racing.

You'll get injured riding dirt bikes, but when you're piloting a drone you can push yourself.

Pilots arrested on alcohol charges get bail

Two airline pilots charged with being drunk as they prepared to fly a passenger jet on a trans-Atlantic route to Toronto have been granted bail on condition they surrender their passports.

Jean-Francois Perreault, 39, and Imran Zafar Syed, 37, were arrested at Glasgow Airport on July 18, shortly before they were due to fly an Air Transat jet to Toronto. The two men had been held in custody since their arrest.

Examine origins of Canada's opioid crisis: Minister

It remains a mystery why Canada and the U.S. are the world's heaviest opioid users, but Health Minister Jane Philpott says divining the answer may hold the key to solving what she considers a national public health crisis.

Philpott, a physician herself, said the problem has only grown worse over the last several years as the number of overdoses and opioid-related deaths has continued to grow.

Christian law school wins legal battle in Nova Scotia

The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal on Tuesday upheld a decision allowing graduates of a controversial Christian university law school to practise in the province.

The court dismissed an appeal from the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society fighting accreditation for graduates of Trinity Western University law school, which is under scrutiny for forbidding sexual intimacy outside heterosexual marriage.

Daesh claims responsibility for attack on church

Daesh crossed a new threshold Tuesday in its war against the West, as two of its followers targeted a church in Normandy, slitting the throat of an elderly priest celebrating Mass and using hostages as human shields before being shot by police.

It was the extremist group's first attack against a church in the West, and fulfills long-standing threats against "crusaders" in what the militants paint as a centuries-old battle for power. One of the attackers had tried twice to leave for Syria; the second was not identified.

"To attack a church, to kill a priest, is to profane the republic," French President Francois Hollande told the nation after speaking with Pope Francis, who condemned the killing in the strongest terms.

The Rev. Jacques Hamel was celebrating Mass for three nuns and two parishioners on a quiet summer morning in Saint-Etienne-du-Rouvray when the attackers burst in and forced the 85-year-old priest to his knees before slicing his throat, according to authorities and a nun who escaped.

The two attackers were killed by police as they rushed from the building shouting "Allahu Akbar," Paris prosecutor Francois Molins said.

One had three knives and a fake explosives belt;

the other carried a kitchen timer wrapped in aluminum foil and had fake explosives in his backpack.

One of the assailants was identified as Adel Kermiche, a 19-year-old who grew up in the town and who had tried to travel to Syria twice last year using family members' identity documents, but was arrested outside France and handed preliminary terrorism charges.

Kermiche was put under house arrest with an electronic surveillance bracelet after a judge overruled prosecutors and agreed to free him, Molins said. However, the bracelet was deactivated for a few hours every morning as part of the surveillance agreement, Molins said — hours that corresponded to the time of Tuesday's attack.

A statement published by the Daesh-affiliated Amaq news agency said Tuesday's attack was carried out by "two soldiers of the Islamic State" who acted in response to calls to target nations in the U.S.-led coalition fighting the extremist group in Iraq and Syria.

Japan shocked by mass murder

The killing of 19 people at a home for the mentally disabled raised questions about whether Japan's reputation as one of the safest countries in the world is creating a false sense of security.

The deadliest mass killing in Japan in the post-World War II era unfolded early Tuesday in Sagami-hara, a city about 50 kilometres west of central Tokyo, when authorities say a former employee broke into the facility and stabbed more than 40 people before calmly turning himself in to police.

While not immune to violent crime, Japan has a relatively low homicide rate of well under one per 100,000 people. Mass killings usually are seen half a world away on the nightly news, although seven Japanese were among the dead in a recent hostage-taking in Bangladesh that targeted non-Muslims.

First Lady earns new fans

Sorry, Democrats. #ElectMichelle will never be more than a wishful hashtag.

The same thing that made Michelle Obama such a powerful voice for Hillary Clinton at the Democratic convention makes it unlikely she'll spend a huge amount of time on the campaign trail or, heaven forbid, run for president: She's just not a political animal.

That's sorry news to delegates who were moved to tears by the first lady's nailed-it speech at the convention Monday night, where she delivered a compelling argument for Clinton's election from the perspective of Sasha and Malia's mom and also managed to skewer Donald Trump without uttering his name.

Democrats were still enthusing over Mrs. Obama's speech the next day — and hoping the first lady's message would help win over those who have yet to commit to Clinton.

"Imagine yourself being a Bernie-or-Bust person listening to that," said Rep. Keith Ellison, a prominent Bernie Sanders supporter during the primaries. "You've gotta kind of say, 'Well, I guess Michelle has an important point to make here.' This is how we get to unity."

Before the first lady's speech, New York's Daily News tweeted out its planned front page, focused on Clinton-Sanders discord. Three hours later, the paper tweeted: "Stop the Presses! New front ... THE LADY IS HER CHAMP. Flotus speech brings down the house."

Creative twittering commenced, involving the hashtags #ElectMichelle, #FLOTUS-forPOTUS and #Obama2020.

Even Trump, who has an insult ready for any Democrat who crosses his path, had only nice things to say.

"I thought her delivery was excellent," he said in an interview with The Hollywood Reporter. "I thought she did a very good job. I liked her speech."

+ VICTORIOUS

On Tuesday evening, Hillary Clinton won the convention votes needed to capture the Democratic presidential nomination — and make history as the first woman to become the White House nominee of a major U.S. political party.

Democrats, said it looked like Mrs. Obama was having fun on the stage, "so I'm hopeful that that's a sign that means that she's going to keep doing it."

Yes, and no.

Although Mrs. Obama is expected to campaign for Clinton, the White House has not set expectations high for a rigorous pace.

The first lady said early on in her husband's tenure, "Politics is important ... but it's not who I am and it's never been a goal of mine."

As for talk of political aspirations for the first lady herself, her husband has a big bucket of cold water at the ready.

The president told a town hall earlier this year: "There are three things that are certain in life: Death, taxes and Michelle is not running for president."

BlackBerry reveals its new phone

MOBILE DEVICES

DTEK50 built to fend off cyberattacks, company says

In a bid to once again make its struggling hardware business profitable, BlackBerry is launching a new smartphone billed as the most secure Android device available.

The company on Tuesday unveiled the DTEK50, a phone it hopes will appeal to “everyone” due to the insidious threat that mobile security risks now pose to the public.

BlackBerry said the DTEK50 has been designed to fend off cyberattacks with features such as built-in malware protection and encryption of all user information. In addition, it provides the ability to see and control which apps are allowed access to features like the phone’s camera.

The phone is BlackBerry’s thinnest and has an on-screen keyboard — not its traditional keyboard.

The DTEK50
CONTRIBUTED

BlackBerry’s smartphone sales in total (including the Priv), according to its most recent quarterly results — a drop of 100,000 over the previous quarter and 200,000 fewer than two quarters earlier.

The DTEK50 will retail for $429, a sign that the company may have learned from the sales flop of its first Android-powered phone, the Priv. At a cost of $899 without a carrier contract, the Priv was released late last year and at the time, it was the most expensive Android phone on the market.

But that price likely won’t be enough to win over a large number of customers, said Detlev Zwick, an associate professor of marketing at York University’s Schulich School of Business. “If they really want to change momentum, BlackBerry would need a hit with a handset,” he said. “This is not it.”

The DTEK50 is available for pre-order online, with shipping to start Aug. 8.

U.S. lays out response plan for cyberattacks

The White House warned Tuesday of a “revolution” of computer-generated threats to the U.S. stoked by growing cyber aggression by traditional U.S. foes like Russia and North Korea, and issued a colour-coded response plan for the U.S. government to use after major cyberattacks.

Lisa Monaco, U.S. President Barack Obama’s homeland security and counterterrorism adviser, said while Russia and China grow “more assertive and sophisticated” online, Iran has attacked U.S. banks and North Korea is showing a willingness to attack companies and countries alike. She also warned that non-governmental actors, like Daesh and “hacktivists,” are finding it easy to advance their goals through the internet.

“To put it bluntly, we are in the midst of a revolution of the cyber threat — one that is growing more persistent, more diverse, more frequent and more dangerous every day,” Monaco said at a cybersecurity conference in New York.

Aiming to streamline Washington’s response to major attacks, Obama released a presidential policy directive that establishes six levels of severity for attacks, a colour-coded system formally used by the Homeland Security Department. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ontario is looking at B.C. tax aimed at foreign homebuyers

Ontario finance minister Charles Sousa says he will be examining British Columbia’s new tax aimed at foreign homebuyers “very closely,” as he looks for ways to address eroding affordability in Toronto’s housing market.

Sousa spoke enthusiastically about an announcement made Monday by B.C. Premier Christy Clark and B.C. Finance Minister Mike de Jong to impose a 15 per cent tax on foreign nationals looking to snap up homes in Vancouver’s scorching real estate market.

“I welcome what (de Jong) is putting forward, and we’re certainly looking at whatever options can be made available,” he said during a news conference Tuesday.

But, he added, it’s important to consider that any similar policies introduced to cool down Toronto’s heated market could have knock-on effects to other parts of Ontario that aren’t experiencing the same run up in house prices.

“So we’ve got to be cognizant of the impacts of those decisions,” said Sousa, who is part of a committee, alongside Federal Finance Minister Bill Morneau and B.C. Finance Minister Mike de Jong, looking for ways to improve housing affordability in Canada’s hot-test markets.

A report from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation back in April pegged the rate of foreign ownership in Toronto’s condo market at 3.3 per cent.

GUEST OP-ED ROBIN V. SEARS DEFENDS U.S. CONVENTION GLITZ

If you had sat in New York when Mario Cuomo gave his 'city on the hill' speech, or in Denver as Obama captivated more than 50,000 souls, you'd have respect for the power of American political showmanship.

It is a predictable four-year ritual for Canadian pundits to sneer at the glitz, showmanship and substance-free style of American political conventions. Those sneerers merely reveal their ignorance of cultural differences.

First, U.S. conventions on television are the tip of a political iceberg. Each day there are more than one hundred caucuses, off-site speeches and parties, parties, parties. Having sacrificed my liver in the interests of political education on more than 10 occasions as a "foreign guest" of both Republican and Democratic conventions, I can attest that they are a powerful and effective political tool.

Yes, we would not feel comfortable being used as a TV audience for four hours for four nights at our conventions. And yes, the glitz and hyperbole and the comedians and stars seem over-the-top to Canadian sensibilities. We are not Americans.

When U.S. visitors sag wearily at our less show-bizzy conventions and roll their eyes at our captivating two-hour constitutional debates, we should perhaps honour, not sneer at, our cultural differences. Our respect for those differences is an important glue in our friendship.

If you sat in New York when Mario Cuomo gave his "city on the hill" speech; or saw the unknown state senator from Illinois electrify the 2004 convention in Philadelphia, watched in horror by Hillary Clinton only a few feet away; or sat slack-jawed in 2008 as Obama in Denver captivated more than 50,000 souls, who had waited not less than three hours frying in 30 C-plus heat in a massive stadium — you'd have respect for the power and impact of American political showmanship.

Common to both our convention cultures is bonding — activists who never get to see each other have become too elitist, too exclusive ... and worst of all, too boring to a new generation.

Would any Canadian political-convention director have had the guts to risk potty-mouthed Sarah Silverman and Sen. Al Franken doing a comedy routine on opening night? Or risk having a cerebral-palsy speaker becoming a lightning rod for exploitation criticism?

Candidly, no. As a result, Canadian political conventions get embarrassing TV

So the next time someone sneers at the "shallow American glitz" of U.S. political conventions, you might mildly point them to YouTube highlight reels: Goldwater's 1964 "Extremism is no vice!" speech, Jesse Jackson's bitter concession speech, Bill Clinton's stage-stealing speech in 2008 and a dozen others.

This year, turn to the DNC's "Studio 2016" on your smartphone to see not only a live stream of the entire convention but dozens of side alleys to interviews, profiles and commentary provided by a huge team of digital-production experts. Then be in awe of the ability of America's political professionals to meld star power, technology and political organization in a way no other democracy can do.

If you need further proof about impact, look up Cory Booker, as the networks split the screen to show the oratorical political star of his generation, Bill Clinton, stare at first skeptically and then with smiling interest and finally with ecstatic pleasure at Booker's barn-burner. See Michelle Obama deliver a speech so stunning it will be studied for years. Elizabeth Warren's forensic evisceration of America's Berlusconi. And Bernie Sanders' demonstration of genuine political grace in rallying his heart-broken supporters to his enemy.

Imagine the young voter in rural Mississippi or a Newark slum moved by such oratory, seeing for the first time possibility and promise and potential. Then accept that yes, U.S. conventions are very American.

But no, they are not shallow. They are a key pillar of their democracy.

Robin V. Sears is a leadership fellow at the Broadbent Institute.

except at these occasions will drink, eat and ... spend the night together. Sometimes in ways that form the bonds of party solidarity, sometimes generating the next generation of convention partiers. Alliances are struck; political partnerships are formed. Political wounds are healed over a final 4 a.m. toast in a garbage-strewn empty hospitality suite.

Political parties have a hard time today winning a share of their activists' time and enthusiasm. They compete with Pokémon, Snapchat and preening sports stars for attention. It's partly their fault: They ratings. The best nights for U.S. conventions are at the level of Super Bowl audiences.

This is not about show-biz; it is about political mobilization. No one can dispute their approach is more effective than ours. Behind the scenes they do the private interpersonal work of party building. In public they do the work of introducing their voters to their choices in a compelling and high-impact manner.

Proof? Each party typically gets a 3 to 6 per cent boost in popularity following their nights of celebration. Ours never do.

'Peg deserves better than to have Hull in hall

Colin Fast
Metro | Winnipeg

For the past 15 years, True North Sports & Entertainment has been an ideal corporate citizen in Winnipeg. It brought two professional hockey teams to town (the Winnipeg Jets and, before them, the Manitoba Moose), built an arena and a training complex, raised millions for charities and is investing millions more in redeveloping the city's downtown.

So why the hell is the company inducting Bobby Hull into its new Winnipeg Jets Hall of Fame?

Of course Hull is celebrated locally for his role in bringing pro hockey to Winnipeg in the early 1970s and for helping the Jets win several WHA championships. His exploits on the ice are unassailable.

Unfortunately, his well-documented troubles off the ice have largely been forgotten over the years. So maybe it's time for a refresher.

Hull's second wife, Joanne, accused him of abuse during their 20-year marriage, which included his time with the Jets. During one incident, she said, he threatened her life with a loaded shotgun. During another, she said, he beat her in the head with the heel of a shoe and then dangled her over a balcony. "I thought, this is the end, I'm going," she told ESPN as part of a 2002 documentary. And physical cruelty was featured prominently in testimony during the couple's 1980 divorce.

The abuse was corroborated by Hull's own daughter, now an attorney who specializes in domestic-violence cases, during an ESPN interview.

Hull remarried in 1984, and two years later was arrested on charges of battering his third wife, Deborah, during an argument in the parking lot of their Chicago-area condo complex. "There was evidence he had struck his wife in the face," police said at the time. "She had some contusions, some swelling."

Hull's wife later refused to press charges against him, but he did plead guilty to assaulting a police officer during the incident.

When he was asked by the National Post in 2010 about previous allegations of abuse, Hull said, "I think my wife is a better wife now than when we got married."

If that isn't repugnant enough, consider Hull's quotes in a 1998 Moscow Times story when he said the black population in the U.S. was growing too fast and that Hitler "had some good ideas. He just went a little bit too far."

Credible domestic-violence allegations, assaulting a police officer, and racism? Pro-Hitler sentiments? Geez.

This organization rightfully shipped Evander Kane out of town for skipping a few practices and restaurant tabs, yet it's going to throw a celebration for Bobby Hull?

This honour might make a few old-time hockey fans happy, but it's a crosscheck to the face of the wider community that True North has tried so hard to serve over the past 15 years. Hull may have been a great Jet, but the Jets, True North and Winnipeg are better than Bobby Hull.

Mooove over conventional dairy

WATER BUFFALO

A boom in an unusual milk is being driven by foodie culture

Genna Buck
Metro Canada

At Gerry McClintock's home, buffalo roam.

Business is booming at his family dairy farm near Courtenay, B.C. — but not thanks to conventional dairy cows.

He raises water buffalo: docile, river-dwelling dairy animals of South Asian origin; not to be confused with North American bison or African buffalo — you'd be wise not to try milking either of those.

He's milking a growing market for products made with rich, creamy buffalo milk.

In the five years he's been in business, growth has been strong and steady at about 10 per cent a year, until now.

"Recently it's really started to take off," McClintock said. "We're expecting growth in the 30 per cent range this year."

About half his milk is made into yogurt even thicker than the Greek type, because it's so high in fat and milk solids and naturally exists in a homogenized state.

The rest is sold to producers of cheeses including mozzarella di bufala, an ultra-creamy Italian delicacy that's particularly tasty in a Caprese salad with tomatoes and fresh herbs.

Water buffalo from the McClintock family's herd near Courtenay, B.C. CONTRIBUTED

Georgs Kolesnikovs, founder and director of the Great Canadian Cheese Festival, is a fan.

"Buffalo milk makes an exceptional cheese. It's porcelain white. It's a richer, fattier cheese than cow's milk and the taste is a richer dairy taste," he said.

And nothing, he said, compares to buffalo ice cream: "The first time I had ice cream with water buffalo, I asked, 'What is this? This is just heavenly!' Very creamy, very rich, very white."

Kolesnikovs, too, has witnessed a buffalo boom. "When I started the first cheese festival in 2011, I think I could count the number of cheese producers using this milk on one hand. There were maybe two or three," he said. "Now there are probably two dozen."

Why? Growing interest in gastronomy.

"It's driven by the real cheese enthusiasts, the foodies. They want something better, more natural, healthier, more local."

McClintock recognized the demand for the types of products he produces: with no additives or imported ingredients, using animals that are 100-per-cent grass-fed.

But there's another reason he got into the buffalo business after years as a beef farmer. His daughter studied dairy farming and had wanted to get cows, but the amount the family would have to pay for a quota — a one-time fee of $43,000 per animal, according to the B.C. milk marketing board — "didn't make economic sense."

And buffalo yogurt and cheese, still niche items and mostly handmade, command a premium price, as opposed to commodity-priced cow's milk.

Still, Kolesnikovs doesn't expect Buffalo stuff to sell on par with conventional dairy any time soon. There's still a large group of Canadians who are icked out by buffalo dairy — possibly because it's "exotic" and unfamiliar.

They might warm up to the idea after meeting a water buffalo in person. Compared to cows, they're positively cuddly, with personalities, "just like a dog," according to McClintock.

"Supposedly they make wonderful pets, if you want a 2,000-pound pet," Kolesnikovs said.

A sketch show that knows when to keep it short

The women of the Baroness von Sketch Show. CONTRIBUTED

THE SHOW: Baroness von Sketch Show, Season 1, episodes 3, 4, 5

THE MOMENT: The short sketches

Episode 3: The title card reads, "Moms Say Hello." One by one, various moms knock on back doors, pass each other walking, answer phones, tentatively open basement doors. Each time, they trill "Helloooo" or "Hellew?" or "Heh-LO!"

Episode 4: Four office mates finish digging a grave, then roll in a wrapped corpse. "Stop crying," one says to another. "We all agreed: F— Tom, marry Jane, kill Todd. Now call Tom, he's going to be so excited."

Episode 5: A woman approaches her very pregnant friend. "May I touch?" she asks. "Go ahead," the friend replies. The woman reaches out and squeezes her friend's breasts. "So beautiful, what a miracle," she coos.

The CBC wisely renewed this series almost immediately after it began airing. Rejoicing abounds. The sketches are consistently fresh and funny, and here's one big reason why: writer/performers Carolyn Taylor, Meredith MacNeill, Aurora Browne and Jennifer Whalen understand that some sketches are meant to be brief.

That may sound simple, but it eludes too many comedy shows, including the granddaddy, Saturday Night Live. How many times have you laughed at an SNL sketch as it began, only to feel your smile fade as it drags on?

The Baronesses don't belabour. This frees them up to cram the maximum amount of funny into 22 minutes. And as a viewer, you get to relax, because you know that if a bit goes longer — unlike the trio in Episode 5 who do an intervention with a pal who can't tell a story right — it's worth it.

Baroness von Sketch Show just wrapped its first season on CBC-TV, but you can watch episodes online on the CBC website.

Ontario pair is growing tropical fruit in the north

Terry Brake was in a car crash 11 years ago that left him with a brain injury and forced him to quit his job as a mechanical engineer. He had to relearn how to walk and talk, and was unable to work longer than two hour stretches.

As part of his therapy, Brake was given a banana plant from his South African doctor to help relax him. That gesture planted an idea. When his longtime caregiver Laurie Macpherson bought a 40-hectare farm in Huron County the idea took seed. They became business partners and started a tropical fruit farm.

Growing bananas and papayas in Ontario's climate would appear to be an impossible endeavour without a sophisticated laboratory and team of horticulturalists. However, the two simply started seeding and graphing plants on their own and with lots of trial and error, it took root.

The cost of bananas is four for $2 while papayas are $3 each, compared to the average of $1.20 and $6 respectively at the big supermarkets.

Located in Blyth, about a three-hour drive west of Toronto, Macpherson and Brake needed a career change when they started the farm in 2010. The locals were skeptical when word got out they were growing bananas.

"We've been accused of growing pot or we were getting it from the food terminal," says Macpherson, who was previously a law clerk for 25 years.

"So we had open houses, asking them to come in and see it for themselves."

A cluster of 10 banana trees with broad, fragrant leaves hits you in the face as you step deeper into the hoop house, essentially a giant plastic tent with metal arches grounded by wooden planks. The bananas are still green and won't be ready for market for another week, but

Macpherson goes into her house to fetch a plate of Lady Fingers, a type of fat little bananas with thick skins, that's sweeter than the Cavendish, the variety produced for export markets.

A circular path along the perimeter of the house is dotted with pineapple plants, long spiky leaves poke your ankles as you walk past trees sprouting guava, papaya and oranges. Brake, who acts as the farm's administrator, plucks a leaf from the lemon tree for me to smell. The scent was more intense than lemon zest.

"Our dream is to see growing everywhere and not have to depend on other countries and employ local people," says

Brake, "We don't need to rely on boats or planes and we can have better tasting fruit that would otherwise rot during transport."

"We travel to the Dominican Republic and get tips from the plantations there. We also made a friend in Jamaica who works at a resort and showed us how to graph and grow the plants," says Macpherson. "We also learned that orange trees have to be constantly trimmed before they bear fruit, and that lemons have to be picked before they turn yellow or else they rot quickly."

This year, they're introducing lychee, starfruit and passionfruit. The one crop that failed to flourish? Coconut. The cold-sensitive tree didn't survive the winter and the two thought it was too much trouble to replant it.

But how do the rest of the plants fare since Ontario is far from having a tropical climate? When temperatures start dipping, the hoop houses are heated by an outdoor furnace fuelled by wood cut down on the farm's property. "We do select cutting," says Brake. "We have loggers cut trees from an area and we don't cut from it again for 20 years. We noticed in the last six years, our maple trees have gotten bigger because they have more room to grow now."

The duo's efforts aren't being universally praised by the community, however. The farm is currently facing multiple charges from the Township of Huron and Huron County as well as a single charge from the Maitland Conservation Authority for allegations including failure to obtain permits for its hoop houses as well as altering the wetland and clear-cutting on their property.

When contacted for a statement, The Township of Huron and Maitland Conservation Authority said they cannot comment on matters regarding ongoing cases.

Brake and Macpherson are scheduled to go to pretrial with the conservation authority in December and the next court date with the township is in October.

Brake is optimistic that the legal hurdles will clear by the end of the year. The two hope to expand operations and build 100 hoop houses on the property next year so they could reach other markets in Ontario like the GTA.

"The county put us in a pickle but we're here to stay," says Macpherson.

Equivalent to a medium Chocolate Dipped Cone from Dairy Queen in sugar

Chocolate milk is a favourite of kids and adults alike, and is seen as a fairly healthy way to get in one's milk intake. It gives you eight grams of good quality protein, and if you're working out intensely the carbohydrates help replace lost glycogen that gives you energy. If you're going to enjoy a chocolate beverage, make sure it's regular lower fat chocolate milk and not a liquefied chocolate bar! The Cadbury Caramilk Caramel Chocolate Milkshake is not a milk alternative — it's got double the calories, fat and sugar.

How smartphones are changing cars

TECHNOLOGY

From mapping your route to maybe saving your life

Sami
Haj-Assaad
AutoGuide.com

Your smartphone has become an important part of your life, even during your commute. While using a phone while driving is dangerous, it's clear that the processing power and versatility of your device can be very useful.

Automakers are finally starting to realize this potential and are integrating more smartphone connectivity into new vehicles. The end result is that your phone is beginning to replace some traditional functions in your vehicle. Here are six ways your smartphone is changing how you drive.

Maps

Automakers are turning to smartphones to power the navigation systems in vehicles.

While distracted driving is obviously a no-no, smartphones are meaningfully contributing to the automobile experience. ISTOCK

Thanks to Android Auto and Apple CarPlay, your favourite mapping app is available on your car's dashboard. In addition, all locations stored in your phone's address book can be easily accessed on your infotainment screen.

This is important because, unlike your car, your smartphone has an always-on Internet connection. As a result, your maps will always be up to date and routes will be automatically adjusted to get you to your destination faster by avoiding traffic jams, construction and closed roads.

Media

This is an obvious one. With CD players disappearing from new cars, something has to come along to replace them. Smartphones not only have a lot of extra storage for your music, but they are also connected to the Internet, so they can stream your favourite tunes from an online service like Google Play or Pandora. Many cars also come with Bluetooth so you can stream your music wirelessly. Other vehicles come with an auxiliary cable that can plug right into your phone's headphone jack.

Diagnostics

Ever catch a strange dashboard warning light, only to have it disappear the next time you turn on the car?

There are some apps and hardware out there that will give you more information about what is going on with your ride. First, you plug in a Bluetooth adapter to your car's OBDII port, and then you can use an app to tell you the status of various systems in your ride. You can understand and clear diagnostic trouble codes, or use it to get more information about your air-to-fuel mix.

Some apps can even tell you how to drive more efficiently.

Keys

Connected cars have Internet access, like your smartphone. Many automakers are also starting to offer apps with their cars to give drivers real-time updates on their vehicle's status. You can see where you parked, how much fuel you have left, and even if you forgot to lock the doors. Many of these apps can also give you remote access so you can lock, close the windows or start your car remotely.

GM, Hyundai, BMW and Mercedes offer this kind of connection to your car from your phone, but Volvo is looking to take this concept to the next logical step by making your phone the actual key to your car.

Anti-Collision Systems

As cars become more connected, they will be able to communicate with the things around them. Stop lights, for example, will be able to talk to your car and tell it when the light will go green so it can restart the engine.

That's all well and good, but what about pedestrians? You know those unpredictable people wandering in close proximity to the road? They're often buried in their phones, oblivious to the cars zooming by them. Their smartphones will be able to connect to the car or infrastructure in order to keep collisions and injuries to a minimum.

Jays add depth in outfield

MLB
Upton acquired in trade with San Diego

The Toronto Blue Jays addressed two needs with one deal Tuesday by acquiring Melvin Upton Jr. from the San Diego Padres for a low-level pitching prospect. Upton's addition gives the team a quality veteran backup outfielder for the stretch drive and also provides stability next year in the event of free agency departures.

General manager Ross Atkins said he started talking with the Padres when right-fielder Jose Bautista suffered a toe injury in mid-June.

"What attracted us to (Upton) was several things: the defence at all three positions, speed, base-running, base-stealer, power, versatility and depth," Atkins said. "So I feel great about some of the pieces in the minor leagues, but adding him to our major-league team now and having another year of control seemed to make sense for us."

The Blue Jays also received cash from San Diego in return for 19-year-old Hansel Rodriguez, who's in his third season with Bluefield in the rookie-level Appalachian League.

Im excited to join my new @BlueJays teammates today and can't wait to help continue the winning tradition that's been built here. #lets go @MelvinUptonJr

Upton, 31, had a .256 batting average over 92 games with San Diego. He hit 16 home runs and had 45 RBIs, 20 stolen bases, a .304 on-base percentage and .439 slugging percentage.

He was available to come off the bench against his former team on Tuesday night in Toronto.

"He's having a nice year," said Blue Jays manager John Gibbons. "So we'll think he'll add something."

Bautista returned Monday night after missing over five weeks of action. Michael Saunders is enjoying an impressive season in left field and Kevin Pillar is the everyday centre-fielder.

Upton said he hadn't yet talked to Gibbons about his defined role on the team.

"He said I was going to play, that we didn't bring you here just to have you here, that I was brought to the team to (help them) win," Upton said. "What that might be, I don't know. From what I understand, I'm going to be seeing a lot of lefties. I'm good with that. And whatever else he needs me to do, I'm up for it."

Upton is particularly strong against left-handed pitchers and could be slotted in at the leadoff spot if needed. Barring injury to one of the regulars, he'll likely be used as a late-inning replacement or when a starter needs a rest day or is moved into the designated hitter spot.

Bautista and Saunders are in the final year of their respective contracts. Upton, meanwhile, is in the fourth year of a US$75.25-million, five-year deal he signed with Atlanta before the 2013 season.

Upton will earn $16.45 million next year. Atkins declined comment on financial details but reports indicated the Padres will pay about three-quarters of Upton's remaining salary.

Upton was selected by Tampa Bay with the second overall pick in the 2002 draft and made his big-league debut with the Rays in 2004. THE CANADIAN PRESS

DOPING SCANDAL

Russian suspension tally reaches 85

At least 85 athletes from the 387-strong Russian Olympic team announced last week have so far been barred from the Rio Games in connection with the country's doping scandal.

International federations in canoeing and modern pentathlon ruled out seven on Tuesday, including an Olympic gold medallist, following earlier rulings in swimming and rowing. Some appeals are likely.

Russian President Vladimir Putin's spokesman Dmitry Peskov told Russian media that Putin had discussed the doping issue with his national security council.

"The topic of the recent International Olympic Committee ruling relating to Russian athletes was raised ahead of Putin's planned meeting tomorrow with the Russian Olympic team," Peskov was quoted as saying.

The vast majority of the Russian athletes who miss out are in track and field, where 67 athletes were ruled out when a ban on the Russian team was upheld at the Court of Arbitration for Sport last week.

More are falling foul of new rules imposed in the wake of the country's doping scandal.

While Russia avoided a blanket ban from the International Olympic Committee, it has lost several medal contenders to new IOC rules imposed Sunday banning Russia from entering athletes who previously doped.

Alexander Dyachenko, who won gold in the men's double kayak 200 metres at the 2012 London Games, was among five canoeists ruled out after being named in a recent report by World Anti-Doping Agency investigator Richard McLaren alleging a state-sponsored doping cover-up. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROGERS CUP

Shapovalov arrives ahead of schedule

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

With a victory over Nick Kyrgios in the first round of the Rogers Cup on Monday, Denis Shapovalov showed the world he's ready for prime time. The 17-year-old Canadian dispatched the world No. 19 in three sets in front of his hometown crowd, delivering a performance that left his coach Adriano Panatta stunned.

"Yesterday was as far as I thought he would go," Panatta told Metro. "Anything more would be a bonus. For his age right now, he's already exceeded my expectations."

Hailing from Thornhill, Ont., Shapovalov grew up watching Milos Raonic and has tried to model his game after his big-serving countryman.

The formula seems to be working. Shapovalov won the Wimbledon junior title two weeks ago and was a runner-up in doubles.

Fuoriviva said Shapovalov's game has matured in the past two years. His serve is developing nicely, his forehand is improving and his overall athleticism is continuing to grow, he said.

But perhaps most importantly, his mental toughness is starting to show.

"When a player can go through some draws and beat some good players, confidence shoots pretty high," said Fuoriviva.

The coach says Shapovalov's success is a testament to the depth of tennis both in Toronto and nationwide and a sign Canadians could soon be hoisting some of the sport's top trophies.

In addition to new challenges on the court, Fuoriviva said, his charge is also learning to deal with life in the spotlight.

"He's just your average kid who loves playing tennis," he said. "He's out there signing autographs, taking pictures with everybody. He's handling it pretty well."

The one that won't leave Lefty's mind

PGA CHAMPIONSHIP

Mickelson still ruing British Open loss ahead of Baltusrol

If you thought two weeks was enough time for Phil Mickelson to get over his second-place finish in the British Open duel with Henrik Stenson, guess again.

Lefty said it's going to take a long time to get over the British Open, probably longer than any of his other excruciating losses in a major.

The hurt and disappointment wasn't because Mickelson missed out on either his sixth major or his first win since the 2013 British Open. This was the first time the 46-year-old Mickelson played his best and it still wasn't good enough.

The 40-year-old Stenson won his first major with a record-shattering 20-under total.

"I think it's one of those things where I'll look back over time and my disappointment will probably increase, because I think it's the first time in my career that I have played to that level of golf and not had it be enough to win a tournament," Mickelson said at practice to prepare for the PGA Championship at Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J. "That's a disappointing thing because I would have loved to have added another claret jug."

Jordan Spieth, who played a practice round with Mickelson on Tuesday, walked over to his playing partner and told him it was fun to watch him and that he was unlucky not to win.

"And that's when he said,

STUART FRANKLIN/GETTY IMAGES

'Hey, I've been on that side of things (lately). Masters in '15 and Troon even more so two weeks ago,' Spieth said. "But then he's seen himself on the other side of things where no one is running away with it and he wins in a close battle or he wins by a lot, whether it's in a major or regular tour event."

Mickelson believes he will win again. He feels his game is improving, his swing is back and he likes the course. He validated his first major — the 2004 Masters — by capturing the 2005 PGA at Baltusrol with a 72nd hole birdie.

His goal this week is to play as well as he did at Troon.

"I don't believe that there is a small window," Mickelson said of winning again. "I think there's a really big window of opportunity to add to my résumé, to continue to compete in big events, for the simple reason that the feel and sensitivity of hitting shots, the ability to play golf courses a certain way, to visualize, to make birdies, to pull shots off — that has not diminished."

What many people would like to see would be another Mickelson-Stenson showdown. Stenson said he has not had a chance to talk with Mickelson since The Open.

"It's one of those things; it doesn't really strike you when you're in the middle of it," Stenson said. "But afterward, with the 63 and the 20-under and the way we played, we pushed each other to the limit, both of us, for 36 holes more or less, and trading punches and blows all the way around the golf course for two days. That certainly is what made us play so well. We both wanted it badly and we performed so well because of each other." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

265
Phil Mickelson's 265 final total at Troon would have won every British Open other than the most recent one.

Ref Thomas happy to move on to Year 2

Sarah Thomas was never hit by the pressure of being the first woman to be a full-time NFL game official until after her first season on the job.

It wasn't until this past off-season that Thomas pondered what really happened after accomplishing her goal, which was to work full-time at football's highest level and not necessarily be a trailblazer in doing so.

"When I first started all this last year, I said I don't feel the pressure of it or anything like that, and I don't feel as if I did during the season," she said. "But once I reflected back, I knew that there was a lot of pressure.... When I reflected back on it, I thought if something major had happened with being a first, not that I recognize myself as that, but just being a first, that it could have gone one of two ways. So I'm glad that it was a very smooth, under-the-radar, first year."

Dean Blandino, the NFL's vice-president of officiating, said Thomas "had the same bumps" as any first-year official.

"It was obviously big news last year, but she handled everything so well and she had such a poise and grace about herself," Blandino said this month at the NFL's annual officiating clinic. "It's a challenge for any first-year official. For a first-year official to also be the first female official, there were a lot of other challenges that came with that, and she handled everything really well and had a good season."

This dish is a dinner trifecta thanks to a simple marinade, flavorful salad and 20-minute cook time.

Ready in

Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 20 minutes
Makes: 4 servings

Ingredients

- 2 chicken breasts
- 2 cups (475 ml) fresh or frozen (thawed) corn kernels
- 1/2 cup finely chopped red onion
- 2 cups (475 ml) cooked black beans, rinsed and drained
- 1 red bell pepper, cored, seeded and chopped
- 1/3 cup (80 ml) cilantro leaves, finely chopped
- Marinade
- 2 Tbsp (30 ml) fresh lime juice
- 1/4 cup (60 ml) olive oil
- 1 Tbsp (15 ml) honey
- pinch salt and pepper

Dressing

- 2 Tbsp (30 ml) fresh lime juice
- 2 Tbsp (30 ml) olive oil
- 1 tsp (5 ml) honey
- Pinch salt and pepper

Directions

1. Preheat your grill. Place your frozen corn in a bowl to thaw.
2. In a bowl, whisk together your marinade ingredients. Use about 2/3 of it to coat your chicken.
3. Rinse onions and place in bowl with black beans, red pepper and cilantro. Mix the dressing and pour over mixture. Stir in the corn.
4. Grill the chicken for 10 minutes over medium/high heat. Flip and grill for 10 more. Serve chicken with the mixture. Top with cilantro and a squeeze of lime.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Today you're restless and eager to do something fresh and different. Stay light on your feet so you can go with the flow. Accept spontaneous invitations.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Unexpected secrets might come out today. Or you might make a breakthrough in some kind of research or study of the past. You might discover an old photo album.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
This is an exciting, stimulating day! Stay active so that you can avoid boredom. Your problem-solving abilities are tops, because you're thinking fast and your intuition is strong!

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Bosses, parents and VIPs likely will surprise you today in some way. If offended, do not quit your day job. Be open to new suggestions and new ways of doing things.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Sudden travel plans will fall in your lap today. In fact, you will love anything that introduces you to foreign countries or different cultures.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Stay in touch with your bank account because something unpredictable might affect your shared property, taxes, debt and finances.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Make plans to socialize with a friend or partner today, because you don't want to be bored. Conversations with others will have an exciting, electric quality.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
(Feb. 19 to March 20)
New technology might be introduced at work today. Perhaps a new staff member? Something unusual will make your work-day exciting and different.
